Use Lord Howe Standard Time (LHST) as how as time and Lord Howe Daylight Time (LHST) during DST. Time Zones Being Used in Dependencies of AustraliaThe Australian dependencies don't use DST. Australia has a complex set of time zones, some of which have an unusual UTC offset. Some locations, including Eucla and Broken Hill, observe time zones that are different from the state they are located in. Australian Time Zone History Australia standardized its civil time in 1895. Until then, each location in the country observed its own solar time. From 1895 Australia based its local times on Greenwich Mean Time (GMT), then the world's time standard. Need some help?Australia There are 37 time zones in the world and six of those (or seven during Daylight Savings) cover the 50 states that make up the United States. Within those time zones, 13 states are divided into two zones. Quite often, just a small portion of these states are in a different time zone than the rest of the state. But South Dakota, Kentucky, and Tennessee are nearly cut in half by the time zone change. This is not unusual, as time zones throughout the world zig and zag along lines of longitude with no distinct pattern. But why are time zones like this, and how exactly is the United States split? Time zones are crooked because it is up to each government to regulate them in their country. There are standard time zones for the world, but where exactly those lie and whether to split the country up according to these is a decision made by individual nations. The United States, for example, had its time zones standardized by Congress. When first drawing the lines, officials tried to avoid splitting metropolitan areas and took other factors into account that might have complicated life for each area's residents. In many places, U.S. time zone lines do actually follow state borders, but that is certainly not always the case, as you will see in the following 13 states.
